

An interview with JOHN GREEN
author of the new crime thriller

NOWHERE MAN

Tp $32.99

Why did you give up work as an investment banker to write a thriller about money, murder and markets?

They say you should write about what you know! But truthfully, when it dawned on me that what got me up in the morning was writing and not my day job, I quit the job. I've always loved stories and hankered to write them, and that's what I'm now doing.

What can you tell us about your childhood?

I grew up in Kings Cross. Back then, it was a village... a weird village: blue-collar Aussies, migrants, prostitutes, bohemians, eccentrics, communists, bikies, strippers and drag queens. Everybody knew everybody.

Where else could a 7-year-old boy have a prostitute pay him? I was on my way to the Saturday matinee movie when, feeling my pockets, I discovered I'd lost my money. Crying, I retraced my steps along Darlinghurst Road until Shirley called me over from her regular doorway. When I explained my catastrophe between sobs, she handed me enough money for a ticket, a drink and a snack, patted me on the bottom and sent me back to the movies.

In writing this book, you predicted the future twice. That's a bit strange, isn't it?

Scary actually! Mostly art imitates life, but for me it was the other way around. I first thought I'd finished Nowhere Man in August 2001. I sent it off to an agent just weeks before the September 11 terrorist attacks. The problem was that, in my original story, I had fictionally destroyed the World Trade Centre. I'd visited there only a few months earlier and a number of people I knew were killed when the terrorists struck. Obviously, I had to do a major rewrite. But that wasn't the only one.

I left the book for a while, then dreamt up what I thought was a wild stock market bust. I did that for two reasons... for an exciting, white-knuckled ride for my main character – a woman who is left alone and in huge debt by her suddenly missing husband... and frankly because I was worried that world markets were going nuts and that we might be in a hyped-up bubble.

A publisher knocked back my book because, she said, my fictional crash was too unbelievable. She was wrong. The financial crisis that ripped global markets apart from mid-September 2008 hit the world just before the book could be published. So again, a real-world crisis forced a major rewrite!

I then re-set my story smack inside the actual global financial crisis, weaving my fiction with the excruciating facts that we all know only too well.

Why the title Nowhere Man?

It reflects how I see the title character, Michael Hunt. His shadow casts darkly throughout the story. He is everywhere, yet nowhere. His deserted wife, Sonya, a university professor, is the real hero of the book. An intelligent woman who thinks she has a fulfilling life... that is, until it falls apart and she faces the ugly truth.

It's got money, murder and passion... and some very unusual science. Wealthy, but lone, stock-trader Michael Hunt is a secretive man with a past that he has not even shared with his wife. But Sonya is forced to start piecing it together when Michael suddenly goes missing, leaving her millions in debt, a bank foreclosing on their Sydney beach house, a love-triangle murder and many unanswered questions. When the global financial crisis erupts, Sonya's world gets even bleaker, until she stumbles on some strange files that will change her life forever. They are the key to repaying her debts and finding Michael, or at least why he left and why he lied. Using these files, Sonya risks everything. Her journey takes her from Sydney to Princeton University to ask a famous physicist for help in unlocking the mystery. But Sonya's hunt for Michael becomes a search for herself.

A brand new novel featuring Jackson Brodie – another deliciously complex, intelligent and witty addition to this wonderful series. As always, the action revolves around our unlikely hero Jackson as we meet a cast of characters who initially seem to have nothing in common, but who gradually become entwined in a delightful, almost Dickensian, manner.

It's a day like any other for Tracey Waterhouse, former cop and now security chief at a tatty Leeds shopping centre. Until she, well, accidentally buys a child! A small, neglected and possibly abused child, but someone else's child nonetheless. And whoever her parents are, someone seems to be very keen to get her back.

Witness to Tracey's moment of madness is Tilly, an elderly actress whose memory is not what it could be. In fact, Tilly is currently starring in a TV series and sometimes it's hard for her to tell what's real and what's happening on set. And finally, there's Brodie – former cop, former army investigator, former gumshoe, now 'semi-retired'. He's back in his home county looking for the birth family of a young woman in New Zealand. Could there possibly be a connection between these three?

What I love about Kate Atkinson's books is the way she is always fresh and surprising. This book - packed with unlikely heroes and villains, plus one very lovable dog - is definitely an intelligent page-turner. If you haven't read any of the earlier books, this is an excellent place to start. – Annabel
